To Our Readers

Thanks to more effective treatments and medicines, our Veterans who have HIV/AIDS are now living much longer with a better quality of life. Along with VA medical care, there’s a lot you can do to stay strong and healthy to fight HIV/AIDS. Learn more on page 3.

Depression can also be a serious health condition for our Veterans. Read on pages 4 and 5 about many effective ways to treat and manage this mood disorder.

Everyone loves an inspiring story. Check out page 6 for one woman’s journey of how she came to embrace a healthier lifestyle. One way to do this is to enjoy healthier versions of beverages. See page 7 for a delicious holiday beverage recipe and a fun and festive activity created by Todd Soper, our talented illustrator at the Tampa VA hospital.

We celebrate another inspiring Veteran who appeared on the cover of this magazine’s Summer 2017 issue. Read more about him in ‘Signing Party’ on page 6.

Be well!

Vitamin D for bones and...

Vitamin D is essential to keep your bones strong and healthy. It helps:

• Absorb calcium, also needed for healthy bones
• Maintain blood calcium and phosphate levels to keep bones hard and strong
• Grow new bone tissue
• Prevent osteoporosis in adults
• Prevent rickets in children

Besides keeping your bones healthy, vitamin D helps grow cells, maintain muscles and nerves, reduce inflammation, and promote better immunity to help your body fight infections and some diseases.

How to get vitamin D?

• Food –
  - Salmon, tuna, milk, some fruit juices, and breakfast cereals
• Dietary supplements
• Sunshine –
  - Vitamin D is made in our body when the sun’s ultraviolet light touches our skin. However, be careful to protect yourself. Too much sun is a major risk for skin cancer.

Living with HIV/AIDS

Veterans with HIV/AIDS now live much longer and have a much better quality of life, thanks to more effective treatments and medicines. Along with the care provided by your VA medical team to fight HIV/AIDS, there’s a lot you can do to stay strong and healthy, every day.

Eat a nutritious diet
Get the right nutrients and the right amount of food to keep your body and immune system strong to help reduce symptoms of HIV/AIDS. This includes fighting side effects of medication, like loss of appetite and nausea.

Get regular exercise
Aim for at least 150 minutes per week to work your heart and lungs, build and maintain strong muscles and bones, and increase energy and appetite. Check with your health care provider before starting to exercise.

Mind your mental health
You may have emotions such as anger, sadness, and fear. Also, it is possible to have depression or anxiety. Talk with your VA health care provider to get the mental health care and support you need.

Consider alternative therapies
Along with your medical care and anti-HIV drugs, alternative therapies may strengthen your immune system, reduce symptoms, and reduce medication side effects. Examples include tai chi, massage, and herbal medicine.

Talk about sex
Be honest about your sexual practices to get the best possible health care. Tell current and past sexual partner(s) you have HIV/AIDS so they can get tested. Learn about ways to help you have safer sex to protect yourself and your partner(s).

Avoid (or strictly limit) alcohol and recreational drugs
These substances weaken your immune system. Plus, you may have more side effects from HIV/AIDS medicine. Talk to your VA provider about getting help to quit.

Quit tobacco
If you use tobacco, including smokeless, look for ways to quit. When you have HIV/AIDS, it does more harm than to those who don’t have HIV/AIDS. Quitting tobacco is a powerful way to improve your health. Contact your VA health care team or visit www.smokefree.gov/veterans to get started.

Talk about your military experiences
Consider joining a support group, or ask your VA health care team for a possible referral to a mental health professional.

It’s normal to feel sad or depressed sometimes, such as when someone close to you dies. We may cry, have trouble sleeping, or lose our appetite. These are typical human reactions after a loss.

What’s not normal is for people to feel this way over long periods of time, according to Bryan Ballot, M.D., a board-certified psychiatrist and Mental Health Product Line manager for the VA Sunshine Healthcare Network. He said a “major depressive disorder” may be present based on how long the depression lasts, in combination with other physical symptoms.

Depression is a mood disorder that affects how you feel, think, and manage daily activities. However, depression can affect more than your mood. “For example, you may feel depressed or irritable most of the day for at least two weeks. You sleep a lot or not enough. You’re tired, lose weight or gain weight.

You may have thoughts of your own death and you lose interest in life in general,” Dr. Ballot said. Plus, people can experience major depression anytime in their life, and it can happen more than once.

Sometimes depression comes with other serious conditions like cancer, heart disease, stroke, and Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. It can also occur when abusing, or withdrawing from, drugs or alcohol.

Depression often causes poor sleep. However, getting to the core of the sleep problem can be challenging, according to Dr. Ballot. Older male Veterans often don’t like to talk about their feelings, or only talk about their irritability rather than their depressed mood. “Often, it’s their wives who say their husbands are grouchy, not able to sleep, and lack their usual ‘get up and go,’” he said. “With these symptoms, there’s often depression.” All Veterans seen at VA facilities are screened yearly for depression.

Treating Depression
For enrolled Veterans, the first step in treating depression is to contact your VA Primary Care Provider, Patient Aligned Care Team member, or mental health professional. After an evaluation and if diagnosed with depression, treatment begins with medication, psychotherapy, or a combination of both. “Patients who are treated with both antidepressant medication and cognitive behavior psychotherapy do much better than with either one alone,” Dr. Ballot explained.

Antidepressants work well for about 60 percent of patients who are closely monitored during the first few weeks, said Dr. Ballot. “However, no medication is perfect and they all have potential side effects. They can cause nausea, which usually goes away after a few weeks of treatment. They can also take two to four weeks to work.” The most commonly used antidepressants can lead to sexual problems in some men and women. If the side effects don’t go away, or remain troublesome, there are other medications that may help. The bottom line of whether to continue a medication or stop and try something else is a decision between the patient and provider.

Psychotherapy helps by teaching a person new ways of thinking, behaving, and changing habits that may contribute to depression, according to the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH).

Doing Battle with Depression
Gradually, you may start to feel better during your treatment. Do things you enjoy and go easy on yourself. Try to be active, and don’t take on large projects. Postpone important decisions until you feel better and avoid using alcohol or drugs that aren’t prescribed for you, advises the NIMH.

“I tell Veterans suffering from depression to resist the symptoms: get proper rest and eat at regular meal times—even when they’re not hungry. Fight the tendency to want to be alone. Get out and be among people. Ask for help from family members, friends, and health care professionals,” Dr. Ballot said. If a loved one is talking about suicide or death, always take them seriously, he advised. “If they refuse, get help for them anyway. Better to prevent a suicide than to regret not calling.”

A Fraction of the Person She Was, and Thankful For It

By Ed Drohan

Army Veteran Susan Mahon isn’t the woman she was just a few years ago, and for that she is very thankful.

Mahon, with the help of programs offered through the James A. Haley Veterans’ Hospital, lost 135 pounds. She had gained this excess weight while bedridden with a chronic disease for more than a year. When her health improved enough, she joined several classes at the hospital, including VA’s MOVE! program. This is the largest and most comprehensive weight management program associated with a medical care system in the U.S.

“For a year and a half, I wasn’t able to get out of the house. I got so depressed from the illness and the weight gain that I was at a loss,” Mahon said. “So I joined these classes – MOVE!, THRIVE, one for pain management, and one for anxiety and stress. Just through the classes and the instructors, I started seeing a change in my attitude.”

Most programs described are available at VA facilities in the VA Sunshine Healthcare Network. JAHVH Health Promotions and Disease Prevention Coordinator Dave Folds, says these programs help Veterans lose excess weight and make lifestyle changes to live overall healthier lives.

The eight-week, JAHVH My Health Works program also helped Mahon improve her life so much that she wants to be a volunteer with the program.

“I strongly recommend the MOVE! program. Take as many classes as you can because you get so much support from the instructors and the VA,” Mahon said. “That’s why now I help other Vets because their support saved me.”

Veterans enrolled in VA care in Florida, South Georgia, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands interested in MOVE! and other classes, should check with their Patient Aligned Care Team (PACT). To learn more about MOVE!, visit www.move.va.gov.
